

Resumé a název práce v anglickém jazyce:

Rights and duties of forest owner (Práva a povinnosti vlastníka lesa)

The thesis is composed of seven chapters. Chapter one is introductory.

Chapter two defines basic terminology used in the thesis. The legal regulation of rights and duties of forest owner is based on the Forest Act (N. 289/1995 Coll.). The forest is a forest stand with its environment and land determined to fulfil the function of forest. Other terms defined in this chapter are especially function of a forest, the land designated to fulfil the function of a forest, and the forest categories. Part two of this chapter is describing historical progress of forest ownership, what is ownership, who can be the forest owner.

Chapter three is about basic rights and duties of forest owner, about the relevant Czech legislation, control of observation duties.

Chapter four concentrates on rights and duties of forest owner within forest management. This chapter is subdivided into six parts. Part one describes the forest managing. Part two is about forest plans consisting of regional plans of forest development, forest management plans and forest management guidelines. Part three is about administrative-legal instruments and duties of forest owner within forest management, within the reconstruction and breeding of forest stand, felling timber and forest transport and so on. Part four describes protection the forest against pests and other detrimental agents. Part five deals with economic tools using in forest management. Part six is about the claim of forest owner for compensation of damage.

Chapter five deals with right of common use of forest, the right of everyone to enter the forest and pick wild fruits and dry branches and with rights and duties the forest owner within common use of forest.

Chapter six is about responsibility of forest owner.

Conclusions are drawn in chapter seven.